Madison woman held in fatal stabbings

Former DOC employee has Friday court date in Indianapolis

BY COLLIN OVERTON

A former employee of the Madison Correctional Facility charged with fatally stabbing two people and injuring a third in Indianapolis is scheduled to appear Friday morning in Marion County Court.

Kristen L. Wolf, 28, of Madison, was arrested Saturday as a suspect in a stabbing incident at an apartment in the 5600 block of Portsmouth Avenue in Indianapolis on May 11. She is accused in an attack that killed Victoria Cook, 24, and Dylan Dickover, 28, and injured Elizabeth McHugh, 33.

According to a police affidavit, a roommate of the victims told police that she, Cook and three friends — McHugh, Dickover and a second male witness police declined to name — were in the Portsmouth Avenue apartment at around 8 p.m. when the roommate and her friend went upstairs.

The male friend then went downstairs, the roommate told police, and when he returned, he was looking for a weapon and told the roommate that a woman downstairs was stabbing people.

The roommate went downstairs shortly after and saw Cook, Dickover and McHugh lying on the floor with stab wounds, according to the affidavit. She called 911 and tried to stop the bleeding.

HDBR OKs partial demo at 505 Walnut

Demo is part of rebuild/ renovate plan targeting dangerous structures

BY MARK CAMPBELL

Madison's Historic District Board of Review gave approval Tuesday for a rare partial demolition and rebuild of a fire-gutted, two-story structure in the 500 block of Walnut Street that the board, the developers and many others think will serve as a catalyst for redevelopment of the entire Walnut Street neighborhood.

Trevor and Van Crafton, a family operation know as Crafton Brothers Properties that buys and renovates homes for either rental or sale, has been pursuing the project for some time and has already been approved for one of the city's new PACE redevelopment grants aimed at turning around dilapidated or dangerous structures.

The home, gutted by fire in January 2018 with the entire back side reduced to rubble in a blaze that also extended into 507 Walnut Street, will need a partial demolition in order to be rebuilt.

The two homes have sat there since the fire, boarded up as best as possible, as scattered other buildings on Walnut have been improved and the city launched a grant proposal to develop a new Underground Railroad-themed park in the neighborhood.

With Tuesday's HDBR demolition approval, work should begin soon on the two damaged buildings and since the grant program requires work to be finished within a calendar year, major improvements should come sooner rather than later.

The plan is to demolish what is left of the rear portion of the 505 building and construct a new 17-by-7, two-story

Software glitch slows 911 upgrades

BY COLLIN OVERTON

Jefferson County is upgrading its dispatch software this year, but an extra charge from the software company may complicate the process, 911 Executive Director Suzie Lawrence told members of the 911 Communications Administrative Board at a meeting Tuesday night.

County 911 is undergoing a few changes this spring and summer, including upgrading its computer-aided dispatch (CAD) software and moving the dispatch center from downtown to the Jefferson County Public Safety Center on the hilltop in June.

Lawrence said her department was continuing to work with surrounding police and first responder agencies to convert data to the new system from company Central Square. Representatives from the company last August said the new CAD would work with the county's existing geographic informational system (GIS) from WTH Technology, she said.

Off-duty officer hurt when tree falls on UTV

BY COLLIN OVERTON

A City of Madison police officer suffered facial injuries Monday evening when a tree fell on top of the utility terrain vehicle (UTV) he was driving on Bacon Ridge Road.

According to Jefferson County Sheriff's Chief Deputy Josh Taylor, Capt. Dan Stephen was off-duty and riding his Polaris side-by-side on Bacon Ridge in Shelby Township when an ash tree — weakened by all the rain and wind — fell and crushed the roll cage over top of the vehicle, injuring Stephen.

Taylor called it an incident of being in the "wrong place, wrong time" and said damp weather was most likely a factor.

"With the wind and the water saturation in the ground, then the storms over the weekend, trees are just falling over in different areas," he said Wednesday.

After the Jefferson County Sheriff's Office and Jefferson County Soil and Water Conservation District responded to the scene, a family member took Stephen to the hospital with injuries to his face, Taylor said. Stephen did not appear to be seriously hurt otherwise.

Madison Police Chief John Wallace said Stephen was eventually transported to University of Louisville Hospital to check for head injuries, but was expected back to the police department relatively soon.

"We definitely look forward to having him back," Wallace said.

Last week this column focused on Dennis O'Neal's Madison roots and the many local bands he was part of over the years. This week, as promised, we're going to delve into the Lonnie Mack Years and how Dennis was swept along to the pinnacle of the music business.

"I'd gone to college for a year, come back home," relates Dennis, "so I must have been about 20 years old. Back in those days they were staging a lot of concerts over in Friendship, Indiana, so a bunch of us rode over. Lonnie Mack was playing.

A screen capture from a video of Dennis O'Neal playing with Lonnie Mack at Carnegie Hall in 1986 is shown. You can watch the video on YouTube by searching "Lonnie Mack Satisfy Susie."

"Lonnie was from the Aurora area just up the river, so he was kind of a local legend and a rising star. As it happens I knew his brother Billy Mack, who was also in the band. I went to school with him.

"So the band takes a set break but when they come back for a second set they couldn't find the drummer. He'd disappeared somewhere. Lonnie kind of struggled for a few songs without a drummer, playing some slow stuff. But the crowd was getting restless. Billy looks out in the audience, sees me and says to Lonnie, 'Hey, that guy plays drums, let's bring him up!'

"So I played the rest of the day, and it went great. They invited me back a few times, and within a few months I was Lonnie Mack's regular touring drummer. That was in the late '70s, and I was basically on the road with the band for the next decade.

addition there to replace the damaged addition while retaining as much of the front of the building as possible. The damaged addition was not part of the original building but is needed to make the home large enough for family occupancy.

"I'm absolutely ecstatic that you guys are taking this project on and doing everything you can to keep the main part of this building intact," said HDBR Chairman Josh Wilber. "It's going to be a challenge but I want to see this project have a domino effect all down Walnut Street."

"These two properties, 505 and 507 Walnut Street, symbolize all of the key initiatives for neighborhood revitalizing we are proposing — blight elimination, historic preservation, community safety, quality of life and public/private partnerships," Mayor Bob Courtney said Wednesday. "We know that investing in this area will attract additional investment, raise property values and accomplish a comprehensive set of goals."

The developers have a rough outline for their plan but said until demolition is complete and they can fully evaluate the extent of the fire damage and what else must be done, they won't have all of the specifics other than they are committed to putting the building back to city codes and historic design standards whether that ends up being a good thing or a bad thing financially as an investor.

"I've walked back there. There is hardly anything left of the addition — it's in a hazardous state," said board member Thomas Stark.

Although the permit allows the project to rebuild with existing materials, board member Ken Board member Ken McWilliams said he hoped the Craftons would consider removing the vinyl siding that is now on the front facade of the structure and investigate whether the original 1840 Federal-style brick exterior can be restored rather than the non-original vinyl siding that was added just decades ago.

"I wish you would see if the brick under there is OK," McWilliams said. "Then it would really fit into the neighborhood."

The board ended up approving that application and four of the five applications under review overall with the lone exception a request by new home owner Ryan Walker to remove and cap a chimney at 411 East Third Street.

The board voted 4-2 to deny the application while asking Walker to investigate costs for repairing the chimney — possibly with assistance by PACE funding — since the chimney contributes to the appearance and authenticity of the two story, 1880 Italianate-style home.

In old business, the board voted 5-1 to approve new guidelines allowing more HDBR decisions to be made by staff rather than coming before the full board for discussion and a vote in order to fast track applications so that work can start and be completed sooner and at potentially less expense to property owners through work delays while awaiting board approval.

The board had discussed and made amendments to the proposal numerous times over the past few weeks leading up to Tuesday's vote.

Board member Betsy Lyman was the lone opposing vote, asking that the decision be delayed until the board's next meeting when the group will no longer gather via Zoom teleconferencing but in public where other members of the public would have a better opportunity to attend and ask questions. Noting that the written comment period had come and gone with little interest from the public, the other board members voted in favor of passage.

Board members McWilliams and Mike Pittman noted that approving the measure was part of a commitment the board had made to the mayor to turn more routine decisions over to the city's qualified staff members and expedite the application process so that more work to renovate the city's historic structures can be done more quickly.

However, she recently hit a snag a couple months ago when Central Square told her the county's GIS map had a glitch that would cost about $40,000 and several months to fix.

"There have been some issues, for whatever reason, that the mapping that we have now is not very compatible with what Zerker (the name of the new software suite from Central Square) wants to use," Lawrence said. "… They originally told me that we would have to have our mapping company put another layer on our mapping system for the county so they could covert to their system so that everything could work properly."

CAD systems usually consist of a suite of software that allows dispatchers to keep track of calls and see exactly where they're coming from in the community.

The good news, Lawrence said, is that the Indiana Statewide 911 Board will cover the cost of any extra work to the software. That was among a few topics she said she planned to bring up at a conference call with Central Square representatives Wednesday afternoon.

The original July 7-9 timetable for live training on the new system is in place, Lawrence said, but dispatchers will probably still be using the old mapping software until the software is fixed or a different solution can be found.

"The map won't change the timetable, but it won't be as good a map as we hoped to have," Lawrence told board members.

"Now at the time, Lonnie was recording with Capital Records down in Nashville, and he was living down there in a cabin. I went down to join the band and started living in Lonnie's tour bus, which was parked out back.

"As luck would have it, Neil Young was recording across the street at another studio. There was a lot of hanging out and many of the same studio musicians were working on both projects. I was basically the gofer for both bands during that time. It was amazing.

"The thing you need to understand about Lonnie is he was a guitarist's guitarist. He was doing things on the guitar that would make even the best players just freak out. Wherever we'd play, some major musician would be in the audience to watch Lonnie. People like Clapton, Jeff Beck, Ron Wood, Keith Richards and many more.

"Fast forward a few years and Lonnie is an A&R man for Arista records, which is basically a talent scout. He went down to Austin to try to sign this new hot kid named Stevie Ray Vaughn. That started the whole Austin chapter for us.

"The entire band moved to Austin to be closer to that blues rock scene that was blowing up down there. We were there five years, recorded there, and we even played the Broken Spoke bar every Thursday. We ended up touring with Stevie Ray for three years as his opening band.

"It was quite a ride for a young Madison kid, I can tell you that. We played the Houston Astrodome. We played in front of 22,000 in Dallas once, and I'll never forget the wall of sound the crowd made, like waves crashing. We played the Roxy and both Fillmores! We toured in Australia, England, the Netherlands and Canada.

"But the most memorable show was when we were invited to play Carnegie Hall in New York City. It was the first time an electrified blues band had ever played there, so everybody showed up. Hall and Oates. Mick and Jerry, Paul Simon, Dickey Betts and Rick Derringer.

"After the show Paul Shaffer hosted a big party at some Manhattan ballroom, and everybody took turns sitting in with his band. I'll never forget it.

"Things slowed down about 1993, except for a few short tours. It was a long hard run and Lonnie wanted to be more selective. Which gave me more time for my other music career in sound engineering and recording.

"It all started way back in Nashville when we were recording at Capitol. We'd record late into the evening, and eventually the sound engineers would get tired and go home. They'd shut it down and leave. But I was watching closely. I could see how the tape machines worked and how to set the levels.

"After they'd leave I slip into the recording booth and turn everything back on. We'd keep recording until 4 or 5 in the morning. I just kind of figured it out and got better at it.

"Not long after that Lonnie started asking me to set up the sound when we'd play in clubs, because the house sound guys were usually terrible. So I was doing sound for the band, too. That was my intro into sound work.

"Over the years I've recorded and helped produce a bunch of albums for lots of area artists. I was the engineer on the "Madison Bands Together" album that came out about 20 years ago. And I've done the sound on countless live shows and festivals over the years. These days I'm doing most of the shows at the Red Bike Hall."

McHugh described the stabbing to police as a commotion at the door and then a woman came into the living room dressed in "some kind of uniform" with black pants, a shirt with patches on it and a black knit hat. Holding a knife in her right hand, the woman approached McHugh and started stabbing her in the neck, she told police.

McHugh said Dickover tried to stop the woman by grabbing her from behind, but the woman turned her knife on Dickover and began stabbing him over her shoulder.

Cook was pronounced dead at the scene while Dickover, 28, died later at Eskenazi Hospital. McHugh survived her injuries and continues to recover, according to the affidavit.

The roommate told police that she and Cook had recently broken ties with a "violent" man who Cook had been dating and he was "teaching them to kill with knives and axes." Specifically, she said that he "trains women to kill," according to the report.

A neighbor later identified the man that Cook had allegedly dated as Wolf's current boyfriend, the affidavit stated.

After the attack, the suspect left behind a hat with an IDOC patch on it and a tag with the name "Wolf" written on it. A DOC internal affairs investigator matched the description of the suspect with the last name "Wolf" and identified Kristen Wolf, according to the affidavit.

Wolf denied being in Indianapolis on May 11, but a search of her residence on May 22 found several combat style knives and uniforms with patches identical to the patch on the hat found at the crime scene.

Investigators also found sheets of paper on Wolf's bedroom nightstand that described how Wolf had "wondered what it would be like to kill someone and how she took inspiration from serial killers," the affidavit said.

There was also a short will that appeared to be signed by Wolf, Officer Caleb Melloh wrote.

Wolf was not initially charged after her arrest. However, an inmate profile on the city of Indianapolis website showed a Kristen L. Wolf facing two counts of murder. She is scheduled for her first hearing at 9:30 a.m. Friday.

IDOC spokesman Dave Bursten told the Indy Star that Wolf was employed at the department from February 2014 to May 22, 2020, a departure time frame that coincides with the allegations.

Seth Pennington is the new director of the City of Madison Parks & Recreation Department.

Pennington looking forward to challenge

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

Seth Pennington spent the last eight years away from his hometown learning everything he could about organization and leadership. Now he plans on bringing that expertise to the city's parks department.

Pennington was officially named the new director of the City of Madison Parks & Recreation Department last week by Madison Mayor Bob Courtney. For the 2012 Madison Consolidated High School graduate, the job is a chance to give back to a community he loves.

"I've been involved with different private organizations with business development, zoning and leadership development. Basically taking a broken structure and putting it back together," Pennington said. "That's what we're hoping to do here. We want to change our culture and change the way it processes and what we do. Really, we're trying to take a full look at everything we do and saying why do we do it and is there a better way to do it?"

Pennington played both basketball and baseball at Madison before heading to Franklin College for a year. After that, he switched to IUPUI where he focused on education.

After several years of working in the Indiana Senate as well as private business, Pennington and his wife, Kim, moved back to Madison earlier this year. At the time, he didn't have any intention of getting involved in city government.

"The first time they offered me the job, I turned them down. I was happy with what I was doing and I wasn't sure that (parks director) was something that I wanted," Pennington said. "They then asked me to do it on an interim basis and I agreed. After about a week, I realized that it was something that I was really getting into."

Pennington's plan is to not just build up the parks & recreation department, but to overhaul it completely. Pennington looks at what other communities have accomplished with their parks systems and sees no reason why Madison can't follow in their footsteps.

"When you look at Carmel or Greenwood or some other places, you really see what a parks department can do for a community," Pennington said. "Obviously we don't have the money that they have in a place like Westfield, but there are plenty of opportunities to upgrade what we have and to offer programs to everybody."

Pennington said that there are 27 parks in the Madison system, many of which are underused or run down. He points to Bicentennial Park as an example of a park that only gets used a few times a year and the park in the Oak Hill subdivision that has fallen into disrepair. Each serve as examples of a different way of thinking that he wants to bring to the department.

"I look over at Crystal Beach and I know how important that it is to the community," Pennington said of the public swimming pool downtown. "There are a lot of repairs that need to be made with it, but I also see a lot of wasted space. What else can we do there to entice people to come down? Can we put in splash pads or other water park features? There are a lot of things that we can do, it just takes a different mindset."

One thing that Pennington wants to explore is upgrading the Rucker Sports Complex with an eye toward hosting large-scale tournaments.

"We have the facilities around here, there is no reason why we can't do that," Pennington said. "Every year we send our kids away for tournaments; it would be nice to get people to come here instead. It would bring money into the community and it is something that want to do."

But it's not just facilities that Pennington hopes to tackle. The parks department currently offers leagues in nearly every sport, but little else for youth in the community. Pennington hopes to add other programs for kids while also expanding athletic opportunities for adults.

"We're very youth sport-centric. We have a lot of youth sports, but we've also farmed out a lot of our leagues," Pennington said. "But what about other programs? What about somebody my age, in their mid-20s, who doesn't have anything to do? We're wanting to get more STEM programs started and more things for kids who aren't into sports to do. We want to look at increasing adult programs and those for seniors. The parks department can offer a lot of things for members of community outside of just sports."

Pennington also wants to upgrade the department's online capabilities. Eventually, all parks permits and requests will be accomplished online, facilitating the process and allowing the department to better track how and when parks are being used.

Pennington knows that what he wants to accomplish will not be an easy task. He is currently seeking an assistant director to help fulfill his vision, somebody he hopes will have experience in acquiring grants.

But his biggest need will be time. Pennington knows that the changes he wants to make will not happen overnight. But it's a project that he plans on being a part of for the long haul.

"I'm not the kind of guy who just comes in and keeps things going the way they were. I'm the kind of guy that likes to build something, maybe something new," Pennington said. "This is going to take a lot of time, I know that. But it's also something that I'm really looking forward to."

NASCAR champ Busch backs masks in public

BY JENNA FRYER
AP AUTO RACING WRITER

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Kyle Busch says he supports wearing a mask in public so "we all can take care of our neighbor" amid the coronavirus pandemic, a rare instance of the two-time NASCAR champion wading into a social issue.

The reigning Cup champion rarely speaks on non-racing issues, but Busch entered the debate after images from short tracks over the weekend showed packed grandstands with little social distancing and few people wearing masks.

Busch retweeted a photo from South Alabama Speedway in Ozark, Alabama, and added his own message Sunday before the Coca-Cola 600. He applauded fans for supporting their local short tracks but suggested mandatory masks for admission for "healthier practices."

The responses were mixed, not unexpected when it comes to the most polarizing driver in NASCAR. Busch is beloved by his "Rowdy Nation" base but loathed by others for his overwhelming success and confident, sometimes confrontational manner.

After winning the Xfinity Series race Monday night at Charlotte Motor Speedway — his 97th career victory in that series — Busch was asked why he stepped into the debate on mask usage.

"With where we're at today, people are saying that masks don't mean anything," Busch said. "I still think there's a sense of human hygiene and taking care of your neighbor. You go to a racetrack and you cough because you get water down the wrong pipe or whatever it might be, or if you sneeze or whatever, at least you are keeping some of that to yourself rather than just spraying, right?"

Busch added he doesn't think masks can fully stop the spread of the coronavirus but believes they are useful when social distancing can't be practiced. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommends the use of cloth face coverings in public settings where other social distancing measures are difficult to maintain.

"I saw the grandstands packed and just figured, 'Hey, you know, we all can take care of our neighbor,' " he said. "That's just kind of my idea. It's arguable whether or not they really work. I just think it's common courtesy."

Under the health plan NASCAR is using since resuming its season on May 17, masks are required for all personnel on track property. Spectators are currently not permitted and NASCAR does not expect that to change through Talladega on June 21, which is as far as the schedule has been revised to date.

Players call MLB proposal 'extremely disappointing'

BY RONALD BLUM
AP BASEBALL WRITER

NEW YORK — A rookie at the major league minimum would keep about 47% of his original salary this year while multimillionaire stars Mike Trout and Gerrit Cole would lose more than 77% under a sliding-scale proposal by big league teams that players found "extremely disappointing."

Major League Baseball made the proposal to the players' union on Tuesday during a digital meeting rather than the 50-50 revenue-sharing plan that owners initially approved for their negotiators on May 11, several people familiar with the plan told The Associated Press. The people spoke on condition of anonymity because details were not announced.

In addition to its reaction on the economics, the union said "the sides also remain far apart on health and safety protocols" aimed at starting the pandemic-delayed season around the Fourth of July.

In addition to its reaction on the economics, the union said "the sides also remain far apart on health and safety protocols" aimed at starting the pandemic-delayed season around the Fourth of July. The sides have been grappling with how to aim for an opening day originally scheduled for March 26 but pushed back because of the new coronavirus.

"We made a proposal to the union that is completely consistent with the economic realities facing our sport," MLB said in a statement. "We look forward to a responsive proposal from the MLBPA."

Players agreed March 26 to a deal in which they would receive prorated shares of their salaries based on what percentage of each team's 162-game schedule is played. In exchange, players were guaranteed that if no games are played they would receive service time for 2020 matching what they accrued in 2019.

MLB has proposed an 82-game schedule and says the March 26 deal would result in huge losses because it did not necessarily account for a season with no fans in ballparks.

Under the plan given the union Tuesday, a player would keep 90% of his salary up to the $563,500 big league minimum, including those with lower salaries while on optional or outright assignments in the minor leagues, according to information obtained by the AP.

The amount would decrease to 72.5% from $563,501 though $1 million, to 50% from $1,000,001 through $5 million, to 40% from $5,000,001 through $10 million, to 30% from $10,000,0001 through $20 million and to 20% from $20,000,001 and up.

Each player's figure then would be prorated by the 82/162 formula agreed to in March, causing a loss of 49.4%.

There would be an additional $200 million in postseason bonus money that would be given in a higher proportion to players with larger salaries.

As a result, a player at the minimum would earn $262,217, according to calculations MLB gave the union. A $1 million salary would be cut to $434,143, $5 million to $1,642,113, $10 million to $2,947,895, $15 million to $4,049,497, $20 million to $5,151,099, $25 million to $6,048,520, $30 million to $6,945,942 and $35 million to $7,843,363.

Any performance or award bonuses earned would be received at the rate for the income level they fall in.

MLB estimates 2020 player salaries would drop from roughly $4 billion to $1.23 billion, including the postseason bonus pool.

The revenue-sharing plan earlier this month was met with immediate hostility from the union the day owners gave their negotiators the go-ahead. That plan was not presented to players when talks began the following day.

During that session, MLB gave the union a presentation claiming billions of dollars of anticipated losses and held off making an economic proposal for two weeks.

Salaries in the major leagues range from the $563,500 minimum to $36 million each for Trout, the three-time MVP outfielder on the Los Angeles Angels, and Cole, the pitcher signed by the New York Yankees as a free agent this offseason.

According to a study by the AP, 369 of 899 players have salaries of $600,000 or less, according to the rosters frozen in March.

Under MLB's proposal, the playoffs would expand from 10 teams to 14 and players would get bonus money if a complete postseason is played. Usually, salaries are earned during the regular season only and players receive money from the postseason pool, a maximum of about $382,000 last year for a full share on World Series champion Washington.

MLB told the union on May 12 it hoped to play a season in which teams would face each division rival 13 times and every club in the corresponding division in the other league six times: AL East vs. NL East, for example.

Bothersome belching

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I started seeing someone recently. "Matthew" is a perfect gentleman in many respects, but he has one habit that I find very rude and jarring: He burps, frequently, and sometimes without even covering his mouth. We sit down to watch a movie together after dinner, and all I can focus on is his constant gurgles next to me on the couch. The relationship is still relatively new, and I don't want to hurt his feelings, but this is a serious turnoff. What should I tell him? — Excuse You

Dear Excuse You: Don't be too quick to judge: It might not be his fault. Frequent belching can be a sign of acid reflux, which might seem like a minor condition now; however, in the long term it can cause serious damage to the esophagus if left untreated. The next time he's having these attacks of indigestion, suggest that he talk to his doctor about it, thus bringing his attention to the issue while also showing that you care — a win-win.

Dear Annie: Today, I'd like to share some insights concerning bathroom safety. My wife and I are senior citizens, and we sometimes have dizzy spells while in the shower. We used to have a rubber mat on the floor of the shower, but I noticed that the mat became very slippery, which happens over time due to the fats in the bath soap. Seniors should be careful to make sure their bath mat isn't slippery and should replace it if it is.

We've also found that it helps if we wash our faces prior to showering, so that we don't have to wash our faces in the shower, as this tends to be when the dizzy spells occur (because our eyes are closed). Also, I recommend installing a hand-held showerhead and hose so that the water can be directed wherever you wish.

But I think the most helpful thing for us has been buying a chair that is designed to fit in a tub or shower stall. This allows us to clean ourselves while sitting. They're about $40 and are very lightweight so that they can be removed from the tub or shower enclosure easily. I hope these suggestions are helpful and avoid hurtful accidents, especially to our seniors. — Al R.

Dear Al: The bathroom can be a dangerous place even for young folks. The CDC reports that 235,000 people visit the emergency room for accidents they suffered in the bathroom every year. But of course, the danger increases with age, and seniors should take every precaution to make the bathroom a safer place, from installing handrails to using a shower chair, as you suggest. The AARP has an extensive "Bathroom Checklist" on their website that goes into greater depth.

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I've been chatting with a guy online for a few weeks now — nothing serious, just light, "getting to know you" conversations, with some flirtation sprinkled in.

Well, today, he decided to randomly mention that I reminded him of another woman he'd been talking to, who he ended up having an "amazing sexual connection" with, though they didn't end up seriously dating.

I found this to be way out of left field and pretty offensive. Yes, we were just casually chatting online and hadn't even met in real life yet, but I believe that there still should be some basic sense of decorum. Am I crazy? I'm a very open person, but this just seemed wrong to me. I did let him know, politely as I could, that I felt that his comment was unnecessary and not something I needed to know. He responded with an "LOL" and that he'd be sure to never be honest with me again. Was I overreacting? Should I give him another chance? — Peeved in Portsmouth

Dear Peeved: This proud peacock wasted no time putting his sleazy colors on full display — and thank goodness. You didn't even have to waste a date on him. Now that he's shown you who he is, believe him, block him and move on.

Dear Annie: I read with interest the letter from Dawn W. about the disproportionate number of persons with learning disabilities who drop out of school. The other horrifying reality is that a disproportionate number of people with learning disabilities enter our nation's prison system. Nearly 40% of all prisoners have one type of disability, many of which are learning disabilities.

While I agree with her point of view and most of her recommendations, as well as your suggestions, she did not mention many options that parents have access to within the public school system. Additionally, FAPE is short for Free and Appropriate Public Education NOT Free Access to Public Education, as you stated. Big difference! Parents, persons with disabilities and advocates have fought long and hard for this specific language to be included in the IDEA law.

As a dedicated and consistent reader of your column, I always appreciate the variety and breadth of topics you address. Thanks for the opportunity to share information. — Wyoming Strong

Dear Wyoming: I truly appreciate your expertise, and I apologize for the error regarding FAPE. Thank you for taking the time to write.
